"For three days add nights I suffered agony untold from an attack of cholera morbus brought on by eating cucumbers," says M. E. Lowther, clerk of the district court, Centerville, Iowa. "I thought I should surely die, and tried a dozen different medicines but all to no purpose. I sent for a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and three doses relieved me entirely." This remedy is for sale by Arcadia Valley Drug Co.

ATHENS, August 12, 1901.

Dear Friends—I have had a sneaking feeling all the time that Greece mightn't appeal to me, that my appreciation of the Acropolis would have to be a forced one, whereas really it is easy for me. Not that I get the spirit of it all as some of the people do who are drilled in the history, but color effects and beauty of line appeal to me and those are fairly overwhelming on the Acropolis. The creamy and brown tinge in the marble, the yellows of the wide stretching plain and the deep blue of the sea, together with the wonderful mountain effects make up a whole that is thrilling. I hadn't been able to understand until this summer how bare mountains comparatively verdureless could account for all the raving of the enthusiasts over Greek scenery. You get atmospheric effects that are indescribable, not only the gray blue of the distant mountains as we see them in Missouri, but mountains nearer than those are enveloped in such lights that all the poetry that is within you is aroused. The rocky ledges are not stern brown rocks; they look purple or pink or reddish blue. You wouldn't have them green for anything.

From Capri we took a steamer to the Blue Grotto and little boats took us in. The Blue Grotto is a cave in the island of Capri, but instead of a floor bottom it is the sea that gets in by an entrance less than three feet high and just wide enough for a boat to go through. We lay down flat in the boat and the boatman pulled us in by a chain, for the oars can't be used in the entrance. Once inside the effect is startling, for the light from the water is refracted in such a way as to make the roof which is forty feet high seem a dark blue. The water below you is forty feet deep and a light silvery blue, not like the sky; bluer than that and clear. Your hand in the water looks like shining silver. It is 175x100 feet inside of the Grotto. A little boy dived for some of the boats but we were not near enough to see him shine. After the Blue Grotto we steamed over to Sorrento. None of us were sick for the sea was quiet and the boat steady. There came four or five hours of the keenest pleasure we have had this summer, driving from Sorrento to Amalfi. The road is made around the sides of the mountains that form the Mediterranean coast at that part of the shore. We were sometimes five hundred feet up looking straight down on the sea. Sometimes huge butting cliffs seemed about to drop on us. The road is smooth as a floor and a gradual ascent or descent. Prof. Powers says it is the most beautiful drive in the world and that he never took it under more favorable circumstances than last Monday. The sun was not shining for one thing, a circumstance that you might not count for much unless you'd been here in this glare of white roads and houses. Then a storm came up ahead of us and we had the black clouds and lightning. It rained almost none and yet the air was cool enough to make us put on our jackets. Then back of us as we looked toward the island of Capri and the west were beautiful light clouds, made, by the sun trying to get through, light blue, yellow and pink in succession. And then at sunset a rich red glow all over the Mediterranean below us, followed by a rainbow coming a little way up from the water.

But to return to Amalfi. The night we spent there was such a romantic one. The hotel looked right down into the Mediterranean on two sides. And the moon came up and early in the morning the fishing boats went out and gathered in the nets that were strung out in the water for hundreds of yards. The hotel used to be a monastery. Some of the girls had rooms just like a monk's cell and the dining room was the cloisters. The tables were set along the side of the court and we looked through the columns into the court where there were trees and an old well. The management had been working hard getting ready for us, festooning the arches with vines and flowers. On the wall side of the cloisters were pasted the sailings of the North German Lloyd Steamers in huge red letters. While we ate two men with banjos and a little boy with gestures and a voice entertained us. Among other things they played Marching Through Georgia. We have had the orchestral accompaniment to our meals several times. After the concert some one passes a plate around for coppers.

Tuesday P. M. I cannot tell you about Olympia. There is no town there; a station and one or two houses, then a long walk through the sun up a hill to the new R. R. hotel, past another hill and the museum. The hotel was closed for the summer but it is managed by the same people that run the Patras Hotel. We took our walters and all with us on the same train. A woman in charge of the place had dinner almost ready and it wasn't long until we were being served roast chicken as usual. Our hotel was up high on the hill that looks down over the valley with the excavations. Olympia is a desolate looking place and yet so beautiful. The absence of all modern life made it easier for the imagination to reconstruct the life of olden times. We stayed among the ruins picking out the temples and various parts till almost sunset and then we went up on a little height part way up Mt. Kronos and watched the twilight until nearly eight o'clock. The only noise was the tinkle of the goat bells on the surrounding hills. The sunset was a quiet one, very light yellow and blue with one star shining mildly. For a thousand years, I think it was, the Greeks gathered there for their games and worship. It is hard to reconstruct the semi-religious character of the meetings. The next morning we had in the museum which is a small one and very satisfactory. The pediments of the Temple of Zeus are there, the Nike of Palanios and the Hermes of Praxiteles. We have had two days in Athens and three nights. Yesterday morning and this we have spent in the National Museum. There are some beautiful things there, not many of them familiar to me.

It Happened In a Drug Store.

"One day last winter a lady came to my drug store and asked for a brand of cough medicine that I did not have in stock," says Mr. C. R. Grandin, the popular druggist of Ontario, N. Y. "She was disappointed and wanted to know what cough preparation I could recommend. I said to her that I could freely recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that she could take a bottle of the remedy and after giving it a fair trial if she did not find it worth the money to bring back the bottle and I would refund the price paid. In the course of a day or two the lady came back in company with a friend in need of a cough medicine and advised her to buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I consider that a very good recommendation for the remedy." It is for sale by the Arcadia Valley Drug Co.
